Esteemed Friend,

In introducing the following essay to your notice it is not with the presumption of it being a tribute worthy your elevated and variable station; nor with the hope of attracting any more attention by appearing under your auspices, but from the gratification which the first opportunity affords me of making a public acknowledgment of the excellent sentiments I entertain your professional attainments and private virtues.

The attractions and confidence you have been pleased to bestow on me with, on many occasions, are deeply and permanently impressed on my affections. One duty though life may be to seek a better occasion to render you a more suitable return for your kind consideration.

Yours very respectfully

W. M. Talmadge

The anomalous properties that this has appeared to possess, ought to have induced philosophers to make enquiry to ascertain the various properties of the vegetable, and what attention its culture might require; it has long been considered, merely, as an object of curiosity.

Equally solicited with my much respected friend to draw to you from the British Museum the large mass of unpublished which augment its voluminous pages; and very sensible of the caution which ought to be shown in admitting new artists into the catalogue of painters, still I cannot distrust myself of what may become a spirit of fanaticism, but continue to think that the benevolent Editor of the Annals, in photo-houses on all things, and who infuses the pictures, has given the means of temporal comfort, as well as he has provided the way eternal happiness, and for this purpose has infused the restoration process in the various productions of nature - the animals, the vegetables, and the mineral kingdom, and which only require our attention and industry to bring them into effective operation.

It is our ignorance more than the violence of disease which renders our efforts unavailing and frustrates our purposes. Thus of covered to possess perfect, so where else to be found in facilitating difficult of the crystal is to produce a green light when heated.

The one is separated in the glass tests, when part of it runs down with dissolved salt.

2. When the crystal is heated with liquor potash, the green becomes black, but after some time the greater part of the mass runs to the surface, without action, in a flammable form, & a small quantity of oil is separated. In the potash, the mass is increased and it becomes. That part of the mass which sticks to the surface is converted into a granular matter, it has not the appearance of a true glass, it is green, and is soluble with water.
From this action it is precipitated to the bottom of the glass jar. When collected with the glass, it is very hard to break before it runs into a glass.

be procured from the pollen and seed, and perhaps from other parts of the plant.

The property, supposed to be gallic acid, may be found to be a gallic acid, combined with a new basis; or perhaps with a previously known principle, such as many of the vegetable kingdoms the Spaniards, the Opium, and the Hamamelis Compositae have yielded to and rewarded the labours of the Chemist.

As soon as time and circumstances will permit I shall enter-tune a more particular investigation into the subject: believing it to be one from which much benefit may be derived: and I most respectfully invite the attention of the medical public to its consideration, firmly trusting that their labours will be recompensed by valuable information and pleasing discoveries.

In concluding this hasty production, which has extended to a much greater length than I originally contemplated, and for which I embrace, my remarks as much as possible, I must add that in my endeavour to accomplish the purpose just mentioned, I perceive that I, perhaps, have enlarged the cases too much, which are introduced to illustrate the disease and the remedy, and much is left for the reader to infer. Thus, when I introduce a long sinking, a hysterical condition, and requiring Stimulants, I contemplate the idea of all the symptoms, phenomena &c. etc. in manifestation of that state: which to notice or repeat in each case, would have consumed the time I had solemnly engaged to write.
